Partial Least Squares Structural Equation Modeling (PLS-SEM) Using R Joseph F. Hair Jr. 2021-11-03

Partial least squares structural equation modeling (PLS-SEM) has become a standard approach for analyzing complex inter-relationships between observed and latent variables. Researchers appreciate the many advantages of PLS-SEM such as the possibility to estimate very complex models and the method's flexibility in terms of data requirements and measurement specification. This practical open access guide provides a step-by-step treatment of the major choices in analyzing PLS path models using R, a free software environment for statistical computing, which runs on Windows, macOS, and UNIX computer platforms. Adopting the R software's SEMinR package, which brings a friendly syntax to creating and estimating structural equation models, each chapter offers a concise overview of relevant topics and metrics, followed by an in-depth description of a case study. Simple instructions give readers the "how-tos" of using SEMinR to obtain solutions and document their results. Rules of thumb in every chapter provide guidance on best practices in the application and interpretation of PLS-SEM.

Business and Economic Forecasting for the Information Age A. Reza Hoshmand 2002-12-30
The globalization of business and the ubiquity of available data in the information age are the driving forces behind the increasing importance of economic forecasting. In order to remain competitive, private and public organizations alike must employ forecasting techniques effectively. Hoshmand emphasizes the application and practical use of such techniques rather than their theoretical grounding. Decision makers and students who have a solid background in economics and statistics will find this book eminently useful. After discussing the role of forecasting in business decisions, the author moves on to smoothing techniques, regression models, and the advanced time series models of Box-Jenkins. Of particular help to practitioners is the concluding chapter on how to communicate forecasts to management. Forecasting professionals and researchers will benefit greatly from the information presented by Hoshmand, especially in their role as advisors to management. Few forecasters and even fewer managers will have had the luxury to remain fully informed of the new developments in this rapidly expanding field. Meanwhile, the importance of accurate forecasting to every realm of corporate strategy—production, inventory, purchasing, accounting, marketing, finance, and acquisitions decisions, to name a few—has increased exponentially due to the proliferation of data, the heating up of global competition, and the softening of many markets. No one today can afford to remain ignorant of the importance of economic forecasting for business decisions.

A STRUCTURAL EQUATION MODELING APPROACH TO PREDICTING APPLICANT

FAKING Brendan Christopher Lortie 2019 Over the past few decades, applicant faking has become a topic of concern for many researchers and practitioners in the field of Industrial and Organizational Psychology. This has led to the development of many theoretical models of applicant faking. However, very few of these models have been tested empirically. The current study aims to address this need by empirically testing a parsimonious model of applicant faking. This model contains the most frequently-cited components of faking models (motivation to fake, ability to fake, individual differences related to faking, and situational influences). Faking was operationalized as the regression-adjusted difference scores between an "honest" administration of a personality test and an "applicant" condition of the same test. Motivation to fake was posited to mediate the relationship between individual differences and faking behavior. Situational influences were posited to moderate the relationships between individual differences and motivation to fake, while ability to fake was expected to moderate the relationship between motivation to fake and faking behavior. Structural equation modeling results demonstrated limited support for this model. The findings of this study highlight the need for faking researchers to focus on the measurement of faking. Implications for both theory and practice, as well as study limitations, are also discussed.
