From test, I concluded that in following three cases the `socket.recv(recv_size)` will return. After the connection was closed. For example, the client side called `socket.close()` or any socket error

Once `.recv()` returned `b""` you won't receive anything from this socket. The interpretation of "the client (a human) just presses enter" depends on the client (software).

Jun 5, 2015 · First of all: `recv()` does not always receive the data in the chunks that it was sent by `send()`, as a matter of fact - it rarely does - because of buffering (for example, you send 256-bytes receive ...)
