The climate of New Zealand is incredibly varied for a country of its size. The warm, sunny beaches and lush forests of Northland contrast sharply with the snow-capped Southern Alps and dry tussock fields ... New Zealand's climate can be defined as 'temperate' meaning we experience mild weather conditions. However, every so often we experience extreme weather and climate events. One of the most serious types of extreme weather to affect New Zealand are tropical cyclones. Cyclones require very warm ocean temperatures of 27°C or greater.
