2017 Utility Energy

Efficiency Scorecard Grace Relf 2017 This first edition of the Utility Energy Efficiency Scorecard assesses the 51 largest US electric utilities across a range of energy efficiency metrics. The metrics fall into three categories critical to utility-sector efficiency: (1) quantitative savings and spending performance, (2) program diversity and emerging areas, and (3) targets, business models, and evaluation. Eversource MA and National Grid MA both performed best, tying for the top spot. The other top 10 utilities include Pacific Gas & Electric, Baltimore Gas & Electric, Eversource CT, Southern California Edison, San Diego Gas & Electric, Commonwealth Edison, Portland General Electric, Xcel Colorado, and Xcel Minnesota. The Scorecard gives utilities, regulators, and other stakeholders a baseline and roadmap they can use to track performance and strengthen utility-sector energy efficiency. Membership Roster and Registry of Geothermal Services and Equipment Geothermal Resources Council 2008

An Application of Real Options to Capital Budgeting for Power Grid Reliability Paul Borochn

2019 How does a public electric utility company optimize its capital budget for grid reliability? We illustrate an economically optimal way to allocate funding these efforts using circuit-level data from Eversource Energy to quantify the benefits to tree trimming treatments over the period of 2013-2017. A real options framework allows us to quantify in dollar terms the uncertain benefits in terms of customer outages avoided relative to known costs of treatment. We find that the less costly Standard Maintenance Trimming (SMT) is economically effective for all circuit types observed in Eversource's CT grid, while the more extensive Enhanced Tree Trimming (ETT) is effective on dense circuits only. Compared to this model, a traditional discounted cash flow model leads to underinvestment in grid resilience and ignores both uncertainty in estimates and the ability to change policy based on its efficacy.
