Efficient Use of Narrowband Radio Channels for Mobile Digital Communications Michael P. Fitz

1996 Abstract: "The Intelligent Transportation System (ITS) relies heavily on data communications systems to link field equipment such as traffic sensors, changeable message signs and incident response vehicles with traffic operations centers. The Federal Highway Administration (FHWA) has received an allocation of five channels in the 220 MHz band to provide a communications resource for ITS applications. This report investigates a high efficiency mobile wireless modem with a spectral efficiency of 3 bps/Hz. The modem incorporates the following techniques to compensate for the fading channel: transmitter antenna diversity, modulation using intentional frequency offset, interleaved block codes, symbol timing and frame synchronization optimized for fading channels, soft decision decoding optimized for fading, and pilot symbol assisted modulation (PSAM) channel estimation. A prototype of this wireless modem has been constructed and subjected to full bench testing. Preliminary field testing has been performed and more is in progress."
