Recommendation Engines Michael Schrage 2020 "How does Netflix know just what to suggest you watch next? How does Amazon determine what a "customer like you" has also purchased? The answer is recommender systems, the technological concept that lies at the heart of most of the successful companies in the digital economy. Michael Schrage starts with the origins of recommender systems, which go back further than you think (see: the Oracle at Delphi for one of history's earliest recommenders), and a history of the first companies to harness recommendations. He then discusses the technology behind how recommenders work: the AI and machine learning algorithms that power these recommender platforms. Next he discusses the role of user experience, and how recommender systems are designed, and how design choices function as nudges to make certain recommendations more salient than others. He explores three case studies: Spotify, Bytedance, and Stitch Fix, looking at how recommenders can create new business solutions and how algorithms can go beyond curation to content creation. The concluding chapter on the future of recommender systems is perhaps the most enlightening. Moving away from technology and business, Schrage embraces the philosophical, probing the role of free will in a world mediated by recommender systems (a recommendation inherently offers a choice; without the element of choice, any digital manipulation of our preferences cannot truly be called a "recommendation"), and exploring the role of recommender systems as a means of improving the self. In the vein of Free Will, this book presents the essential information while revealing the author's point of view. Schrage wants to push our understanding of recommender systems beyond the technological, to understand what societal role they play and what opportunities they offer now and in the future"--

FlixTime Manish Jalui 2023 FlixTime is a movie recommendation web application that recommends a group of friends having different interests in movie genres, some movies that most of them will enjoy. The system uses Hybrid approach to recommend movies due to the downsides of using only content based approach or collaborative based approach. The application gives user some movies to choose from which are closest to the interests of all the groups members. Recommender systems use algorithms to provide users with useful recommendations for products or services. Recently, these systems have been using machine learning algorithms from the field of artificial intelligence. Recommendation system is categorised in four classes: Simple System using popularity, Collaborative Filtering, Content based and hybrid based Approach. A movie recommendation is being highly recognized as a part of our social life due to its strength in providing enhanced entertainment. Such a system will predict what movies a user will like based on various criterias like the attributes of previously liked movies by that user or the popularity of the movies. Although a set of movie recommendation systems have been proposed and implemented.
